BOOKMAN TO IRISH

Editor Evening Bulletin:—If "Irish" keeps on improving, I shall feel like shaking hands with him across the "bloody chasm" of our international differences. I'm inclined to think that he's a good sort of a fellow after all, and forgive him for calling me names. I can't help warning towards a man who seems to have such a genuine love for things American. But I object most decidedly to his imputing to me motives and beliefs I have neither acknowledged nor expressed.

When I said "ignorant and rabid" Irish, I meant that and nothing else. English words may mean nothing to "Irish" but they do to me. If I had meant the Irish in general, I could and would have said so without qualification.

Besides, I did not say that the English were supercilious, and the Scotch two-faced, as Irish would give the impression I did. I specified a certain class of Irish who came to our shores as objectionable, and so with two-faced Scotch, supercilious English, and all undesirable Americans. It would take too many adjectives to specify the latter. I have too many intimate friends among Irish, Scotch, German, English and other nationalities, to condemn them in one sweeping statement; besides that is not my way. Judging from Irish's last letter, it appears to be his way.

I haven't time to take up "Irish" in detail; I could cover a Bulletin page in quotation from well known writers, substantiating statements I have made. From time to time in my own department I will give in connection with relevant questions, facts covering the points under consideration, and if it is found that I cannot prove what I said as to Anglo-Saxon lineage, I'll cheerfully pay over the $25.

The Irish are known for their poetic temperament, their romanticism, their impulsive generosity, their wit, humor, and camaraderie, but let us not overdo the matter by giving them the due for qualities which ought to be divided among other nationalities. A mere mention of the names: Weyl, Chaucer, Spenser, Shakespeare, Bacon, Milton, Newton, Cromwell, Dryden, Locke, Pope, Berkeley, Addison, Johnson, Cowper, Wordsworth, Byron, Keats, Southey, Tennyson, Swinburne, Newman, Spenser, Huxley, Darwin and many others, as well as these Americans of English descent—Edwards, Franklin (who originated the expression "a wild Irishman"), Irving, Paulding, Channing, Prescott, Motley, Hayne, Hawthorne, Bryant, Longfellow, Whittier, Holmes, Emerson, Lowell, Curtis, Sims, the Beechers, Howells, Warner, Daniel Webster, and so on, inclines a thoughtful person to have a respect for the Anglo-Saxon part of us. In the line of Presidents the only great men in a world-wide sense were Washington, John Quincy Adams, Jefferson and Lincoln. Their ancestry was English. Indeed, whatever may be our racial likes or dislikes, American, Irish or Scotch, we have to acknowledge that the world owes its advancement in literature, science and all material improvement to the English or their descendants. That is, it owes the greatest benefits.

England gave us our best laws—the Magna Charta made the Declaration of Independence possible. Blackstone rises large in the lawyer's horizon. Johnson, Worcester and Webster collected our words for us.

Even "Irish" who has no common language of his own, makes use of English. He talks about the Irish language, but talks in English. Newton, Fulton, Franklin and Edison made possible our modern appliances.

Physical bravery is a good thing, but it does not constitute greatness by any means, so I exclude generals, fighters, etc., for the world is coming to place war where it belongs. But even in that line the French are first, and the English, probably, second.

In many things the Germans lead, but we are really tautonic if we go back a little.

The Irish are emotional—a people of fine feeling, but feeling is ephemeral, and those in whom it predominates will not supply heroes for the Hall of Fame. They will supply the world with orators and actors—they have given us poets. But while we all love Goldsmith and Tom Moore, they cannot be classed with Burns; there is no Irish Carlyle.

With a few exceptions, the less said about American Senators the better, and as for a large class of noisy American politicians, we blush for many of them.

I will be glad to finish our discussion when "Irish" comes to my shanty "among the Kona lava beds," where he will find the latch-string on the outside. The end.

SOCIETY SLEEP WALKER

MRS. TREADWELL McNUTT DOES QUEER SAN FRANCISCO STUNT

The San Francisco Examiner tells the following story of Mrs. Maud Treadwell, who once made quite an impression locally when she visited the city as a member of the Nolan party:

Mrs. Maud Treadwell McNutt, the beautiful young woman whose personal history has attracted much attention in society and who has in her own right a fortune of more than a million dollars, early on Monday morning had one of the most remarkable somnambulistic experiences on record. And her case is one of the comparatively few that can be accepted as unquestionably authentic.

While a patient in the Waldeck Sanatorium, 717 Jones street, she arose from her cot at about 2 o'clock in the morning, passed through a room that was occupied by her nurse, eluded all the hospital attendants and made her way down four flights of stairs, got out to the street door, which is fastened with a secret catch, stroled down the street and defended herself against a couple of women who tried to rob her of her diamond rings and a diamond locket and finally she stopped on Post street, between Mason and Powell, where she was awakened by a man and a woman who chanced along. During all that adventure she was attired in her night clothing, but had a shawl thrown over her shoulders.

Mrs. McNutt occupies rooms 41 and 42 at the hospital, and is attended by Miss Ballard, her private nurse, while waiting for an operation to be performed. Miss Ballard was asleep in the room through which Mrs. McNutt had to pass in order to reach the hospital corridor, and although she was very wakeful and watchful, who must have used extraordinary precautions to make no sound, Mrs. McNutt had been known to walk in her sleep several times before, principally while residing in New York, but the nurse and the hospital physicians had not been notified of that, and so no special precautions to guard against it were taken.

Usually it is easy to arouse a somnambulistic patient, and a sudden awakening is supposed to be dangerous. Mrs. McNutt, however, does not seem to have been easily aroused. She says that she remembers becoming partially conscious that somebody was tugging at her hand, trying to take her diamond rings off and also trying to get a little diamond locket that she wore around her neck. She says, too, that she saw two well-dressed women thus attempting to rob her; that she said something to them, although she cannot now recall what it was, and that the women ran away.

Whether this attempt at robbery actually occurred or whether it was something in the nature of a vivid dream, nobody will be able to determine unless there should be found some witness of the attempted hold-up.

Two men saw Mrs. McNutt running down Post street. They had no idea of her trance condition, but they observed her peculiar garb. Wondering what was the matter, they followed. At Post street, between Mason and Powell, they found her in front of the St. Lawrence Stables, where she quietly sank down on the sidewalk as if in ordinary sleep. The names of these two men have not been obtained. Just ahead of them in arriving at the place where the somnambulist had stopped were Mr. and Mrs. G. H. Knell of 328 O'Farrell street. Mr. Knell is a printer and was on his way home, accompanied by his wife.

The Knells and the two unknown men awakened Mrs. McNutt, who instantly realized the whole strange situation.

"I guess I have walked in my sleep," said she. I am from the Waldeck Hospital. My name is Mrs. Maud Treadwell. Please call a cab and take me back to the Waldeck."

The men took off their coats and wrapped them around the woman, who besides being scantily clad was barefooted. They telephoned for a carriage, but on being told that they would have to wait an hour, they carried the patient to the hospital.

Dr. Barry, the attending physician, says that aside from a slight cold Mrs. McNutt seems to have sustained no injury, but that it is too early to fully determine the results. Mrs. Treadwell was formerly the wife of Joseph Nolan. Three and a half years ago she married Maxwell McNutt, the attorney, who is now suing for divorce from her on the ground of desertion.

HONOLULU'S FIRE DEPARTMENT.

The boys of the Honolulu Fire Department are receiving many encomiums for their fine appearance and the excellent part they played in the Independence Day parade. The feature is frequently mentioned as the best part of the parade. The fire department section consisted of Chief Chas. H. Thurston in buggy, chemical engine, hose wagon, three steam fire engines and two hose wagons. The fire fighting paraphernalia was in brightest trim and order.

SUPPORTS SLOCUM CAPTAIN.

New York, June 23.—At the coronor's inquest today Captain Wade said he thought the Slocum was beached with good judgment and that considering her great length the Captain did the best he could after the fire was discovered.

In asking an adjournment until Monday, Mr. Garvin said he hoped to complete his case during that day and may do so in time for the jury to take it during the afternoon. Coroner Berry granted the request and then declared the court adjourned until Monday.

With the approval of the District Attorney, the members of the crew who were held at the House of Detention, were released from custody.

The bodies of fifty-one unidentified victims of the General Slocum disaster were buried today in the Lutheran Cemetery, Long Island.

The bodies of fifty identified victims were also interred, a majority of them being relatives of the victims already buried.

Jacob H. Schiff, treasurer of the committee appointed by the mayor to solicit subscriptions for the relief of the victims of the General Slocum disaster, reported today that the committee has thus far received $90,000. Contributions, he added, have been on such a generous scale and the amount already so large that a further swelling of the relief fund seemed to him both unnecessary and undesirable.

TROUBLE WITH JEFFRIES.

Harbin Springs, June 15.—Shortly before midnight tonight the pain resulting from the operation performed upon Jeffries' knee today caused the champion to send an emergency call to Middleton for Dr. Devening. The surgeon drove to the fighter's bedside, and after applying soothing applications to the sore joint, gave the patient an opiate that sent him into a heavy sleep. The doctor will remain at Harbin till morning.

The knee was as bad, and even worse, than it had been when the medical man made an examination this morning. He told Jeffries and Traine, Delaney of this, and after a consultation it was decided to operate at once. The knee was lanced and about an ounce of fluid drawn from it. Bandages were wound around the joint and Jeffries was instructed to remain in bed for at least six days. Soon after the doctor left the boxer complained of intense pain and though Delaney objected the bandages were unbound. This gave the champion some relief, but the pain kept increasing and at 10 o'clock it became almost unendurable and caused Delaney to telephone for medical assistance and the doctor to give Jeffries the treatment mentioned.
